

Enrique C. Ochoa teaches History and Latin American Studies at California State University, Los Angeles. A native of Los Angeles, he grew up in the San Gabriel Valley and studied History at UCLA. His current research focuses on issues of power and culture in the tortilla industry in Mexico and Los Angeles. He teaches courses of the Mexican Revolution, Central America, Third World Revolution, and Latinos/as in the U.S. His books include: Feeding Mexico: The Political Uses of Food Since 1910 (2000) and Latina/o Los Angeles: Migrations, Communities, and Political Activism (2005).